Raw excitement

Awesome! The only word to describe Triumph's new power cruiser - the Rocket III.

With a 2.3 litre, 140 cubic inch, in-line three cylinder engine pumping out 140 bhp (141 PS) and a massive 147 lb/ft of torque through its huge rear tyre at just 2,500 rpm, the figures speak for themselves.

It's the largest capacity production motorcycle in the world and accelerates all-comers up to 100 mph, pulling 1.2G in the process. Ninety per cent of its peak torque is delivered at just 1800 rpm.

Something special.

But this bike is about more than statistics. All Triumphs are designed to be ridden, not just admired, and the Rocket III is no different. The aggressive cruiser styling clothes a steel twin-tube chassis that's more than a match for the incredible power output.

Drive is delivered to the fat eight-inch cast aluminium rear wheel by an all-new maintenance-free shaft-drive system and suspension is handled by twin pre-load adjustable rear shocks and upside-down front forks. Brakes come directly from the Daytona 955i sports bike.

The ultimate cruiser experience.

"We wanted to meet the increasing demand for large capacity cruisers, which makes up 50 per cent of the market in the USA alone," explained Triumph Product Manager Ross Clifford. "But we also wanted to make something mould-breaking. It had to be individual, but still useable."

The wobbly option was immediately ruled out. Other alternatives included a V6 and an across-the-frame triple, but the final decision was to go for an in-line triple laid lengthways in the frame.

The 229cc capacity was the largest that could be obtained with this format, and one that could also deliver the target torque output of 200Nm below 6000 rpm.

"It's a power cruiser that makes a statement," said Clifford. "It's the biggest and best we could make."

Details abound to make the bike rideable as well as visually impressive. Rider ergonomics are based on the proven dimensions of the Bonneville America and the use of a dry sump engine keeps the centre of gravity low enough to ensure easy handling.

Fuel delivery is by injection, twin spark plugs per cylinder ensure clean combustion and counter rotating shafts avoid torque twist.

It's a complete package for riders seeking the ultimate cruiser experience.

Unveiled to the public at the Milan and Paris Shows in September, it will go on sale in the Spring in standard colour options of Cardinal Red and Jet Black at a price still to be announced.

Endurance victory for Daytona 600

The Isle of Man isn't the only place where the Daytona 600 has been proving its worth as a world class sportsbike.

Triumph test rider David Lopez, backed by brother Felipe and team-mate Regis Segura took a virtually standard machine to a clear win in the prestigious Catalunya International 24 Hours race in Barcelona, Spain, on July 6.

Modified only with Triumph's own accessory exhaust and screen, plus some adoptions to help speed up wheel and oil changes, the team took second place on the grid in the Supersport class and an amazing 16th overall in a line-up of 57 starters.

Narrowly avoiding a first turn pile-up which could have ended the race after just ten seconds, lead rider David Lopez quickly moved to second in the Supersport class.

Gradually increasing the pace as the evening drew in and the pitstop work got faster, the Triumph took the lead in its class after three hours and pulled four laps ahead of the second placed team during the night.

Near disaster struck at 9:45 on Sunday morning. Up to ninth place overall, it cut-out sensor came loose, killing the engine. Rider Regis Segura had to push the bike unaided nearly a kilometre back to the pits to get the problem rectified. The repair took just two minutes, but the whole incident had cost 23 minutes and the class lead.

Restarting second in class, now five laps behind the leaders, a win seemed to be slipping away, but during an amazing five hour session, with each rider taking 55 minute stints, lap times dropped below the qualifying time and were only exceeded by the top three Superbike runners.

The reward came when they regained the Supersport lead at 2:30pm, by which time they were also closing in on the top seven Superbikes. The gap on seventh place came down to just 45 seconds before the Triumph squad agreed to safeguard the Supersport win and settle for a superb eighth overall.

After 24 hours, 674 laps and 2106 miles, the chequered flag finally came down, making the Triumph the first European machine to win the Catalunya 24 Hours for 17 years, covering a record distance for any Supersport bike.

Ready for Winter

New Triumph all-weather riding jackets and trousers have been released in time for Winter.

The heavy duty Voyager jacket is made from high density two-tone Hestra fabric and features a weatherproof Sympatex membrane. Removable lining, large storage pockets, 3M reflective piping combine to make this a top of the range waterproof, windproof, breathable touring jacket. It is available in two tone blue/black.

The popular Sympatex Frontiers touring pants have been upgraded with thigh length zips allowing the rider to use them as either riding pants in their own right or waterproof over-trousers.

Made from 1000 denier Cordura, they are tough but supple and feature a Sympatex waterproof, windproof and breathable membrane. They are available in black.

Thunderbirds are Gone!

The last Triumph Thunderbird went down the Hinckley production line in June.

Introduced in 1993 to coincide with the relaunch of Triumph in America, the bike has since been an integral part of the Triumph classic range, with almost 20,000 examples being produced.

But with demand for the three-cylinder classic in decline and considerable investment needed to refresh the tooling used to produce the engine, the decision was made to end production.

Bruno Tagliaferri, head of UK Sales and Marketing said: "It's been a wonderful seller, particularly in the UK, but in the last couple of years we seem to have satisfied the demand for a three cylinder classic."

"Our energies are now being focused in identifying new sectors of the classic market, currently not being satisfied."

Goodbye old friend. The last Thunderbird nearing completion at Hinckley.

Blast from the past

Back in the sixties, the annual 500 mile endurance race for production motorcycles at the Thruxton circuit was a highlight of the British racing season. Victory proved the sporting pedigree of the winning machine and sales to young guns seeking the magic 100 miles per hour 'ton-up' were guaranteed.

In 1969 Triumph swept the board, with Bonnevilles taking first, second and third places. Road-going 'Thruxton Bonneville' replicas were soon on the market and became the most sought-after 'café racers' of the period.

In echo of those great days, Triumph have unveiled a 'Thruxton' version of the new-generation Bonneville, combining a unique period style with today's levels of performance and reliability.

The Thruxton 900 uses an enlarged 865cc version of the twin cylinder eight valve parallel twin Bonneville engine, with new cams, carburetors, and megaphone-style exhausts contributing to increased peak power of 70 PS (69 bhp) at 7,250 rpm and peak torque of 72 Nm (54 lb ft) at 5,750rpm.

Polished engine covers, clip-on handguards and rear-set footrests add to the Thruxton's appeal, complimented by a new short front mudguard and evocative seat hump.

Colour options are Jet Black and Sunset Red, each featuring a chequered flag graphic on the petrol tank.

At the excitement and style of another era, available today.

Historic TT success

Triumph ValMoto scorched to a stunning and historic victory in the Isle of Man Junior TT in June. New Zealander Bruce Anstey, 34, gave Triumph its first TT win for 28 years after blasting his Daytona 600 around four laps of the 37.73 mile Mountain Course in just one hour, 15 minutes, 13.98 seconds.

Moroccan Adventure

Searching for new experiences, Michel Pain and partner Carole Morillon headed to North Africa and the mysteries of Morocco. They discovered an unexpected world.

When we decided to make a "voyage of discovery" into Morocco, we had little idea of the sheer scale of the country or the many mysteries hidden in its dramatic scenery. Our objective was to discover a country away from the usual tourist routes that still retained something of its authenticity.

Bathed in sun and with terrain ranging from the Atlantic beaches in the west to the Atlas mountains and the Sahara desert, Morocco was the perfect choice. In mid-August last year we therefore left Rouen with nothing but the Lonely Planet and Michelin guides to show the way.

Our 1999 Sprint ST required no special preparation, just a normal service. Luggage consisted of a pair of panniers, a top-box and a tank bag. That was it!

No need to relate the story of our (still beautiful) ride down through France and Spain (4000 kms return), but we arrived at Algiers without incident for the two-and-a-half hour ferry crossing to Tangier.

We immediately fell into the Moroccan rhythm of life, already based on the principle of "baccchif". I'd hardly put down the sidestand of the bike before I was accosted by the jobsworths of the area who wanted to see the customs papers. It cost 5E to cross the border with a delay of just ten minutes. We were free to explore the alleys of Tangier.

These alleys teemed with life, surprises and impressions. Full of smells, colours and people - sandwich sellers in bare feet sitting cross-legged on the pavement. And all eyes were on this noisy strange motorcycle that has penetrated their world. Their assessment was general and the difference between this world and ours was equally surprising for us.

We followed the signs for Rabat, along the sea shore, so find a hotel at Briek, 150 kms from Tangier. The road was in good condition with people and donkeys crowding along the edges in both directions, selling everything and nothing and waiting for who knows what? In fact, on the roads of Morocco, you are never alone!

In the royal capital of Rabat we stayed at the Hotel Balima. Crossing the city on foot to visit our first souk, we made an obligatory stop at the mausoleum of Mohamed V, creator of Moroccan independence. With its green dome and columns of white marble, its luxury is a stark contrast with the poverty of the slums hidden behind it.

Casablanca was our next destination. Staying at the Hotel de Paris, we left the bike parked in the street, guarded by a local for 1€. Here, as elsewhere, there was nothing to worry about. There was always someone offering to watch over the bike for a few dirhams.

A taxi dropped us at the mosque of Hassan II, a graciously imposing construction and the biggest mosque after Mecca, capable of holding 100,000 people. Its position at the extreme west of the country means it almost rests with its feet in the Atlantic Ocean. And once again, just a few metres away, a poverty that contrasted starkly with this cordy work of art.

The road to Marrakech filled us with impressions. The colour of the earth varied from ochre to red and it was much wilder than anything we had seen so far. The city itself was disappointing - too touristic and organised, with too much harassment directed at these very tourists.

Nevertheless our curiosity allowed us to be guided by a child into the leather district. Despite the folklore aspect, the atmosphere was nauseating and the working conditions anachronistic.

As a balance to this, we stayed at the Hotel du Taiti where the buffer meals were copious and of gourmet standard – an example of the quality food that is generally the rule in Morocco. We can also recommend the superb caramelised peanuts produced by street vendors in the nearby Jemaa El Fna Square.

Our impatience to discover Ouarzazate was rewarded by the beauty of one of the best roads we took during the trip. The immensity of the mountainous desert country and the twisty sinuous route were a wonderful combination.

We stopped at the roadside 'Chez Abdellah' just after the Col Tichka (2,860 m). The welcome of our host, Hassan, was simple and friendly and we passed a pleasant two hours chatting with him. We found out that all the families of the region were the size of a football team and that it had hardly rained at all for the last four years! The winters were however rigorous, with plenty of snow.

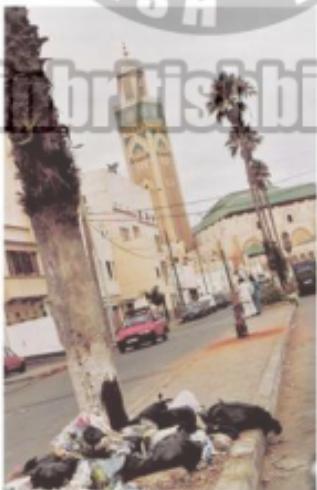

At Ouarzazate we treated ourselves to two days of rest in the luxury of the four star Hotel du Zar and its private swimming pool.

WE FOUND OUT THAT ALL THE FAMILIES OF THE REGION WERE THE SIZE OF A FOOTBALL TEAM AND THAT IT HAD HARDLY RAINED AT ALL FOR THE LAST FOUR YEARS !

The view from our hotel window.

THE KASBAH ASMAA, CONVERTED INTO A HOTEL WITH A SWIMMING POOL, WAS OUR REFUGE IN THE MIDDLE OF A DESERT PLAIN SURROUNDED BY MOUNTAINS.

The next leg of the trip took us along poor secondary roads towards Midelt. Unfortunately the bad condition of the road meant we weren't able to visit the Gorges du Guergour – “only we had a Tegel”!

We skirted the Sahara, feeling its temperature of almost 55°C. In these conditions, the bike started to emit worrying ticking noises. It was the only mechanical concern we had for the whole trip.

The route followed the base of the Atlas mountains that dominated the landscape to our left. Clouds on the horizon warned of a sandstorm that we went through just below a pass. This resembled Normandy fog, except it was hot, dry and it stung!

The kasbah Asmaa, converted into a hotel with a swimming pool, was our refuge in the middle of a desert plain surrounded by mountains. At its centre were several restaurants laid out around a fountain, each identified by different coloured tile mosaics. It was a beautiful oasis of green in the midst of the arid landscape.

Waste bins outside a mosque.

Crossing the agricultural province of Kenifra we approached Fez. In the village of Tirahtitis, we went in search of honey pancakes. It was market day and the buzz of activity was incredible. Trucks carrying sheep or cedar wood were mixed up with shepherds leading sheep by a rope leash, while we sat back and soaked up the atmosphere sipping coffee and savouring the pancakes.

The region was magnificent, offering a new type of scenery: huge plains with scattered settlements of huts or senzis; pine forests; roads shaded by heavily scented eucalyptus trees.

Entering the town of Ifrane, we could have been in Europe. White houses and sloping tiled roofs make up this seaside resort.

In Fez we settled into the Hotel Splendid, where we met two Moroccans who offered to guide us around the markets. They took us first to the medina Fès El Jdid and did the bargaining for us to buy traditional robes and three pairs of slippers. We then met their nieces who offered to show us the kasbah Fès El Bali. Their presence protected us from too much haggling and allowed a more leisurely visit.

The return to the port of Ceuta led us along a winding road through olive groves and cultivated fields. Passing through customs was more difficult this time as we refused to pay the 10€ bacchich.

The resulting two hours wait was in conditions made intentionally deplorable, to 'encourage' tourists to part with the bacchich more willingly. The 35 minute hydro-speed crossing back to Spain was an amazing contrast of efficiency.

Our trip in brief :

- We covered 6000 kms in 15 days.
- We had no problems with supplies. Food, fuel and cheap wine were readily available.
- Our 'Lonely Planet' guide allowed us to easily find a hotel at every stop.
- We saw no Moroccan registered motorcycles at all and only came across six bikes registered in Europe and three camels.
- The weather was always comfortably warm, with just four drops of rain in Ouarzazate.
- 10 dirhams = 1£

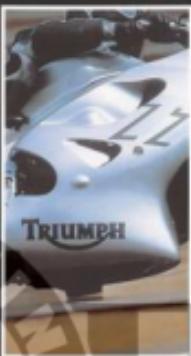

PS. I should add that I didn't cover the full distance at the controls of the ST. My companion took the handlebars for around 1000 kms, allowing me to soak up the sumptuous scenery from time to time.

Her lack of riding experience and short stature didn't dissuade her from taking over a bike weighed down with luggage and a passenger. Bravo to her!

RAT will be organising our own Moroccan Adventure in the Spring of 2004. See the next edition of Torque for full details.

Café Society

London's Ace Café is a modern motorcycling institution. But without the dream and determination of one man, it would have ceased to exist in 1969. Mark Wilsmore made reopening the café and recreating a classic lifestyle his life's work.

Simon Carter went to meet him.

Triumph owners still flock to the Ace Café.

On Kate London. The very words evoke vivid images of what many people view as a golden age of motorcycling. An age when leather-clad rogues with slick-backed hair tried to break out of post-war society, dabbling in the dissolute ways.

'Rockers' of the 1950s and 60s roared to roadside cafés to share their passion for motorcycles and a unique rebellious style and image. The very idea gave birth to the term 'café racer'. A stripped down road bike with low handlebars and an aggressive, sparse appearance that enforced the whole lifestyle. And at the centre of this sub-culture was the Ace Café, a whitewashed building on London's North Circular Road.

The images are still alive today, either as a treasured memory of a youthful past or an echo of an era with its own brand of glamour. But for some people it is more than an idea. For these modern rockers, the past is very much alive. Mark Wilsmore is such a person. But more. Not content with recreating the rocker image with the way he looked, dressed and rode, the Londoner had a vision. He would reopen the Ace Café itself.

The Ace Café first opened its doors in 1938. Although originally designed to service the needs of heavy goods vehicle drivers, post-war motorcyclists adopted the site as a place to meet and talk bikes.

Its reputation spread with the growing influence of rock and roll and motorbikes, combining to give it a sometimes less than savoury reputation. Motorcycling and rock and roll were equally frowned upon by large sections of society, and the widely reported antics of the ton-up boys, so-called because of their determination to reach the magic 100 mph, helped the cafe develop its notoriety.

Time moved on however and in 1969 the café closed its doors. But for Wilsmore, they would have stayed closed.

Mark's passions were horses and motorbikes. His dream of being a jockey was ruled out by his weight, so at the age of 22 he joined the Metropolitan Police Force mounted police. Eighteen years of service followed in what he considered to be his dream job. "I would ride to work on a motorbike, ride a horse all day, ride home from work on a motorbike and then go off to a rock and roll concert!" During this time Mark gained a reputation as an organiser, and was the driving force behind many trips to the Ile d'Or and the Isle of Man.

In 1993 a chance conversation with a Triumph rider fuelled a journey to rebirth the Ace. The rider, an original player in the Ace Café scene, remarked that it would soon be 25 years since the Ace had closed in September 1969. It was decided to organise a reunion. Mark took on the organisation, but his thoughts soon turned to the idea of re-opening the café itself.

There was enough photographic evidence to reconstruct the Ace as it originally was, but this idea quickly lost attraction. "I realised that refitting it as it was would have entailed it being recovered as a museum, which had no appeal to me whatsoever. I planned to open the cafe and see it alive and kicking and that's what propelled the dream forward."

Early enquiries proved disappointing. The majority of the ground floor of the building was being used as a tyre depot, with the remaining section and the entire first floor being used as an office by another company. Furthermore, any change of use planning permission would not be granted until extensive modifications to the North Circular Road were carried out.

Undeterred, Mark pressed ahead with the plans for the reunion. Twenty-five years to the day since the cafe closed its doors, 12,000 people turned up. It was a clear indication that the rebirth of the cafe could work and reassured Mark about his sanity!

The following annual reunions, known as 'Ace Days' continued to take place at the cafe, but by 1997 the 'Ace Day' had to move to a new home in Brighton. The original site could not cope with the numbers, which had swelled to over 25,000.

Having left the police force in 1997 after falling off too many horses and motorcycles, work on the North Circular Road was completed and planning permission for the cafe obtained. The site was purchased later in the year and the company who shared the building with the tyre depot moved out. The second they disappeared, the 'Ace Cafe' opened up, even if it was on Sundays only, with food provided from a burger van at the far end of the car park! "It was popular from the moment we go, with bikes only on a Sunday as we still do to this day."

Pressure from local road and American car fans - another passion shared by Mark - led him to start opening on Wednesday evenings to cater for them. He still does.

If things had been relatively straightforward up to that stage, it was all about to change.

Fifteen feet below the Ace car park was a 60 inch high pressure water main was serving London north of the Thames. On the freezing cold night of March 6, 1999, the dedicated tea drinkers and other assorted regulars had their evening rudely interrupted by an explosion that Mark likens to Armageddon. The water main blew up, leaving a crater in the car park that took 220 tonnes of material to refill!

Mark recalls the incident in detail. Having followed one of the regulars outside to bid him farewell, the car park started rumbling and disintegrating in front of their startled eyes. "The whole car park in front of us started to stand up. My original thought was 'what the F', but by the time I got to the fireward we were running for our lives."

The North Circular Road was flooded to a depth of 25 feet and was closed for an unprecedented ten days. "Had it been a Sunday afternoon the consequences would have been horrific, but actually not one person was injured."

"It was a critical moment for us, but it motivated me to get to grips with the occupier of the site part of the building to persuade them to depart so we could go ahead with the full scheme. The water burst was a very important part of the reopening of the cafe."

"I had seen there were cracks in the building which had been attributed to bad drains, bad guttering and the fact that we were close to the River Brent. But all of a sudden it was clear to me, looking into this huge hole, that the pipe had been leaking water for many years and had caused all the problems with the building."

"I went into battle with Thames Water. Lots of money was spent on the structural repair to the building, most of which was attributed to problems with the pipe. As we are today, we were insured with Footman James and I can not sing their praises enough for their help and support they gave us through those difficult moments we had with Thames Water."

Even so, finishing the rebuild meant many hours spent raising the additional finance required to fulfil the dream. "One popular misconception is that the water company paid for the redevelopment, but that's so far from the truth it's frightening!"

Then in 2001 came the next major opportunity. The tyre company decided to move out. Mark wasted no time. "We were ahead with the full money, opening in September 2001 on the reunion weekend."

Response was immediate and business quickly built up. Today the Ace Café is open daily, serving food and drinks to passers-by, travellers and the simply curious. But it is motorcyclists who still give the place its heartbeat, with live music, special motorcycle-themed nights and hundreds of bikes in the car park on Summer Sundays.

"One bloke remarked that sitting in the Ace Café was like sitting in a time machine. Initially we thought he was referring to the history of the place, but then he remarked that every time he visited, half an hour turned into four or five hours! That in itself was a compliment!"

There are some regulars who were part of the original Ace Café scene in the sixties. The first thing they say is that it was never as big as it is now.

Originally the building was split into two, a cafe and a restaurant. The bikers were never originally allowed into the restaurant! The second thing the old timers say is how much better it is now!

As is probably already clear however, Mark is not a man short of ideas and ambition. With the London base now firmly established and a worldwide market for Ace Café branded merchandise, his sights have been set a little wider:

The current objective is to make the Ace Café brand international through a chain of 'Rockers Restaurants' - there will only ever be one true Ace Café after all!

Sites in Hamburg, Berlin, Mannheim and Vienna are currently being studied, with future targets in the UK, being Brighton, Birmingham & Blackpool.

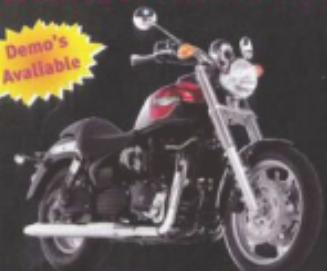

Triumph Night at the Ace Cafe North on the second Wednesday of every month, supported by RAT. A member of the RAT staff will be present and there will be a prize draw exclusively for RAT members. If you're around North London, don't miss it!

Birth of a legend

Triumph's victory in the Isle of Man Junior TT established the new Daytona 600 as a world class sportsbike. We speak to the men who made it happen - rider Bruce Anstey and team manager Jack Valentine.

History was made on Wednesday June 4, 2003. For the first time in 28 years a Triumph factory team raced on the legendary Isle of Man TT circuit. It was also the first TT race for the all-new Daytona 600. For New Zealander Bruce Anstey to bring the bike home in first place in the Junior TT was nothing short of incredible.

The fast, bumpy country roads that make up the 17.73 mile long Isle of Man Mountain Circuit are the ultimate test of man and machine. A cliché perhaps, but true all the same.

Anstey's RACE average of 120.36 mph (195 kph) over four grueling laps - including a fuel stop - was proof positive that the Daytona 600 is a world class sports machine.

A fastest lap of 122.22 mph can only truly be appreciated by those who have experienced the island's rural roads that usually carry everyday traffic at a modest 30mph.

The only men who didn't seem surprised were Anstey himself and Triumph ValMoto team manager Jack Valentine.

"As soon as we tried the bike at the start of the project I knew we stood a good chance at the TT," said Valentine. "The power and the handling was there already. All we needed to do was to work them up to TT race level. We never had any real worries about reliability."

Laid-back Kiwi Anstey, 34, based his confidence on direct experience. His first race on the Daytona 600 brought him second place on the superfast North West 200 public roads circuit in Northern Ireland in May. The result created a wave of optimism that swept him to the start line in Douglas, Isle of Man.

"After the North West I was pretty sure I would do well in the TT," said the real roads specialist. "I had no problems at all during the race. Everything went to plan, so I wasn't surprised I won, but it was still an incredible feeling."

"There was a lot expectation around me, especially after I set the fastest time in practice, but I stuck to my plan and it worked."

"Ryan Farquhar set off 20 seconds ahead of me, but I caught him up fairly quickly and we had a bit of a scrap. Then in the end I let him go, knowing that if I could just maintain my pace, I'd be on for the win."

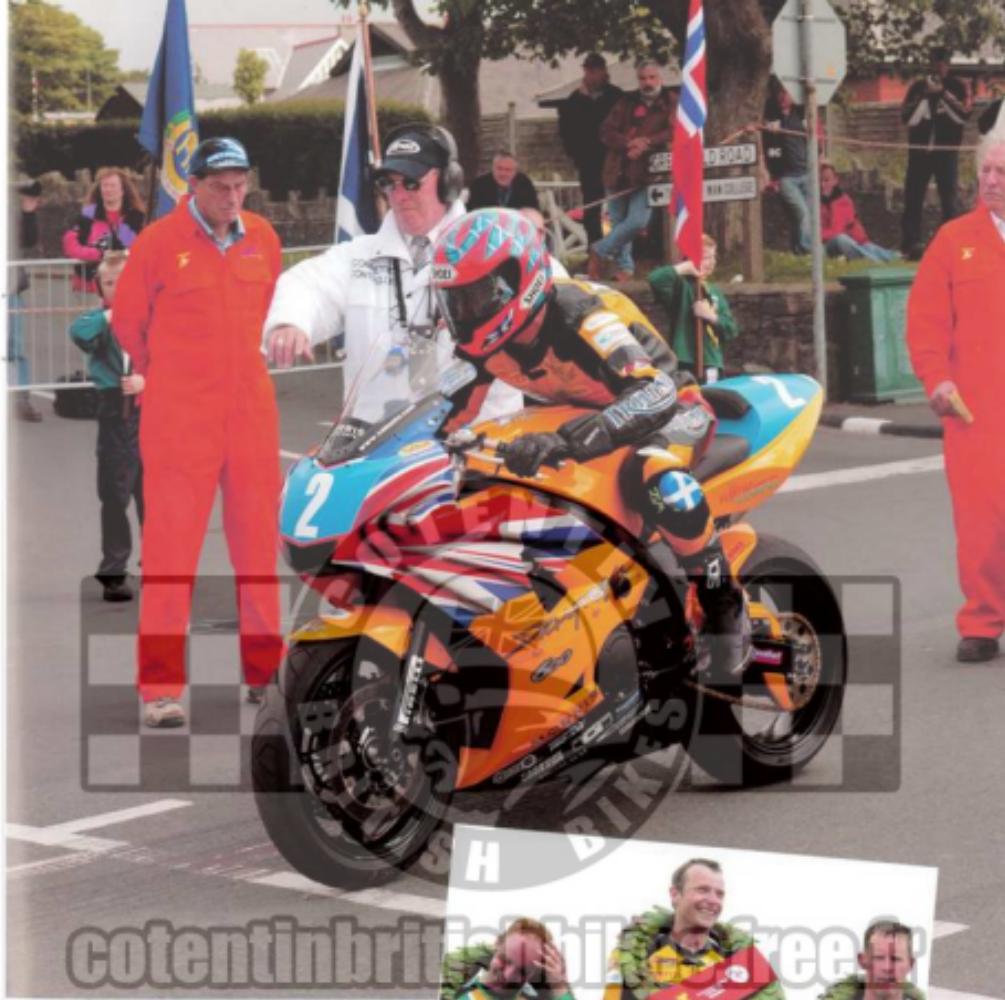

Anstey's Triumph ValMoto team-mates Jim Moodie

and John McGuinness took ninth and tenth places, giving the team a 100 per cent finishing record - in itself an outstanding achievement on the bike-breaking TT course. A superb added bonus for Triumph was the Junior TT Manufacturers Award for the first three riders home on any one make!

That Moodie even made the start of the race was a tribute to the Scot's toughness. To finish in the top ten was a private victory in its own right.

Less than a week earlier he had been hospitalised after telephone wires, brought down in an accident during practice in which TT lap record holder David Jefferies died, wrapped around his neck. Fortunately he was able to stop his bike before serious injuries were sustained, but the resulting abrasions around his throat made completing the four lap race an extremely painful achievement.

Team manager Valentine was overwhelmed by the reaction to the team's win. "The fans have been unbelievable. Every time I walk down the road people are coming up and shaking my hand and congratulating me. It's incredible," he said. "It was a fantastic day for Triumph, the ValMoto team and for British motorcycling."

Above: Jim Moodie shrugged off a horrific accident in practice to take ninth place in the Junior TT.

Right: Victory at the TT was a dream come true for thousands of Triumph fans.

"Full credit has to go to Triumph and all its employees for building such a great road bike, to the Vauxhall team for turning it in to a winning race bike in such a short space of time and obviously to Bruce for bringing it home a winner in the toughest race in the world."

"It is definitely the most satisfying win I've ever had at the TT. The win in 1999 with David Jefferies was fantastic, but this was special - it was history in the making. We've put a British manufacturer back on the map and that's a tremendous feeling."

IT WAS HISTORY IN THE MAKING.

Long live Sam!

Meriden factory engineer Les Williams played a central role in developing the world famous 'Slippery Sam' racer in the seventies. He has now created a replica from original parts.

Words and pictures Brian Tarbox

Slippery Sam is one of the most famous British racing bikes of all time. An unprecedented five Production TT wins in successive years in place in road racing history.

Until Bruce Anstey's brilliant victory in this year's Junior TT on the Daytona 600, Slippery Sam was the last Triumph to conquer the island.

That win in a ten-up marathon in 1973 saw the riding shared by Dave Croxford and Ane George. The year before Mick Grant was in the saddle, and Tony Jeffries' 1973 win followed on the heels of a double scored by Ray Pickrell.

Falls go to the National Motorcycle Museum to pay their respects or cheer from the trackside when the old boy is taken out, dusted down and paraded.

Slippery Sam is the sight and sound of the Seventies to a whole generation of British bike fans.

It is therefore with some embarrassment that I must admit that I didn't recognise the old boy without his clothes. He was naked and undergoing a thorough medical when I blundered in on him.

Without the distinctive Screen and Plastics fairing, Dan Woodward-style fork tank and P&P seat with the Union Jack logo and Slippery Sam signature, there was nothing much to distinguish this T150 Trident from any of the other 'Raygun' silenced 750cc triples that rolled off the Meriden production line.

In fact, Slippery Sam would have been denied race track glory and joined them in the showrooms had he not been pulled off the assembly line and set to one side. Like the other racing Tridents, he was a reject. No one can remember what the problem was. Perhaps cosmetic, perhaps an electrical or mechanical fault. Whatever, it made more sense for the race boys to strip and rebuild the rejects rather than healthy models.

Slippery Sam evolved considerably in his years on the track. Frame and brakes changed. The engine too. All the Production TTs were won using the same motor - CCO3477 TT50T - but that wasn't Sam's first motor. Nor was Sam a winner on his first visit to the island.

The year was 1970, the rider was Tom Dickie and the result was fourth. Team-mate Malcolm Uphill won the production race that time out on another of the triples.

Slippery Sam was simply production racer no 2 until a few months later. The nickname that stuck was born from the bike's appearance as one of three Triumph works entries in the prestigious Bol d'Or endurance race at the Montlhéry circuit near Paris.

Paul Smart and Tom Dickie gave the factory victory. Production racer no 2 was campaigned by Percy Tat and Steve Jolly. They finished fifth but a breather problem sprayed oil everywhere - over the riders, over the bike, over the rear tyre. Slippery Sam became the bike's moniker.

This year saw Slippery Sam's first return visit to Montlhéry. The medical check-up I walked in on was in preparation for the Coupe Moto Legende meeting there in May, where he was paraded on the National Motorcycle Museum's behalf by Richard Darby. For once Sam was in a supporting role. Paul Smart and the Bol d'Or winner were the main attraction.

Although it didn't immediately dawn on me that the bike on the workbench was one of the world's most famous Triumphs, the clues would not have caused Sherlock Holmes too much bother.

The men fettling the bike were former Triumph race mechanic Arthur Jakesman and Les Williams, the factory charge and who organised many of the squad's most successful campaigns as development chief Doug Hele's unofficial race manager. Triumph's 1970 and 1971 Isle d'Or wins were among team outings. Les Head and Slippery Sam's 1971 TT victory could well have been his first and last if Les had not stepped in with a display of what they describe when giving out medals as "service above and beyond the call of duty".

The glorious reign of the works Triumph Trident and BSA Rocket Threes lasted just two seasons. It all began at the Daytona 200 in March 1970 and was over and done with by the end of the following year. With the BSA-Triumph Group struggling under a mountain of debt, there was no money to continue funding the race programme they had hoped would save them.

There were no plans for Slippery Sam to defend his title at the 1972 TT but Ray Pickrell was keen to do the encore. With Doug Hele's okay, Les Williams took Slippery Sam home and prepared it in his own time in his own workshop so that when management finally gave the green light the bike was ready to roll.

But the company's troubles were getting worse. Les was made redundant. So was Slippery Sam. They left Meriden together after Les had scraped together £300 to buy the bike. He says he was thinking of returning it to fully standard trim and running it on the road. Thankfully, he kept it as a race bike instead and took care of its preparation for three more TT wins.

Although Sam is now owned by the National Motorcycle Museum, Les is still consulted about the machine's use and takes a hands-on role in its upkeep at major parades and track events.

The machine was prepared for Montlhéry in the Williams workshop, situated virtually opposite the duckpond in the garden of his 17th century cottage. Les and wife Joan have a second home in Wales. The cottage in Warwickshire was acquired in a part exchange deal on their bike business - L P Williams - which is now owned and run by Trevor Gleadall. It's a short drive from the cottage to the old Meriden factory and Triumph's new base in Hinckley.

Williams, 71, is impressed with Triumph's do-it-yourself-cooked triples. He said: "I've only ever ridden one of the very early ones, but they are the type of bikes we should have produced (at Meriden) if we had had the money and modern machine tools."

Williams, a farmer's son from Gwrydau, served his apprenticeship as a mechanic at the Central Garage in nearby Brecon, and spent his Army years as a display team rider and fitter with the Royal Signals before joining Triumph in 1955. It was a transfer two years later to the factory's experimental department that was to lead to the race track.

There was never an official race shop as such but the factory's involvement in production racing grew with the arrival of Doug Hele and his development of the 500cc Daytona, 650 Bonneville and 750-triples. The experimental department simply took on the new race role as well, and that was that.

Hele and his team made the Bonnie the bike to beat in production racing and went one better with the Trident and Rocket 3 triples. Slippery Sam is one of no fewer than nine of those threes on display at the National Motorcycle Museum.

The pinnacle of the race development programme was the F750. Williams' notes show that on 24/1/70 Percy Tait tested the first crude version of an F750 factory racer at the Motor Industry Research Association's proving grounds at 155mph. More tests at Elvington quickly followed - the speed increasing to 164mph. BSA-Triumph's race ambitions were focused on the Daytona 200 and a head-to-head against Honda's new four cylinder CB750 for the all-important American market.

Dick Mann won the 1970 race for Honda and the 1971 race and AMA Championship for BSA. These F750 machines, campaigned by the likes of Mike Hailwood, John Cooper, Gary Nixon, Paul Smart, Ray Pidcock, Gene Romero and Percy Tait, were the most exciting things on two wheels at the time.

Many replicas have been produced since, for classic racing and road use. And there was a new addition to their ranks this year - an F750 Triumph that's so much more than the name replica suggests.

This bike is the real thing. Built from genuine works spares by Leslie Powell Williams. He bought the parts in 1975 from NVT, the Norton Villiers-based company that had made a dog's dinner out of the supposed rescue of the BSA-Triumph Group.

Les, taken on by NVT after being made redundant by BSA-Triumph, found himself redundant again. He had given NVT the kudos of a TT win by agreeing to have Slippery Sam compete in the 1975 race in NVT colours.

A few months later he was without a job but went on to set up his own successful motorcycle business and £400 bought him the last remnants of the Trident and Rocket 3 race spares, a job lot that included a couple of Rob North frames, a variety of engine components, wheels, brakes and bodywork.

That was 28 years ago. The business took priority and, now retired, Les has found himself busier than ever! He began assembling the F750 racer 15 years ago. It has been a stop-go operation. Having first assembled the motor nearly a decade ago, he took the precaution of having Arthur Jakeman check it over again before the big day arrived for it to be started up for the first time.

There was a third person present for that occasion last February - Neil Payne, former chairman of the Triumph USA Rocket 3 Owners Club and now the competitions and demonstrations manager for the National Motorcycle Museum.

Neil said: "What a fantastic experience! The noise of these things is absolutely wonderful. It must have been a privilege to have seen a whole grid of them in action in the Match Races."

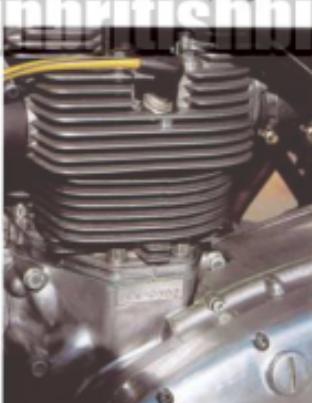

I was there, Neil, and it was. I was there when Cooper beat Agostini at the 1971 Mallory Park Rock of the Year and I buried when Hailwood's engine exploded at both Daytona 200s racing for Romero (Triumph) against Mann (Honda) at the 1970 Daytona and for Mann (BSA) against them all the following season.

Replicas help keep the memory alive. Les nothing against them per se but objects strongly to any classic racer being passed off as something it's not. He claims to know several people who are doing just that and has suspicions about many more.

I am convinced he would rather destroy the F750 he has made than have it falsely represented as a 'genuine' works bike.

He said: "The parts are genuine but it wasn't assembled and raced by the team in the Seventies so it can't accurately be described as a works racer."

To avoid any hint of ambiguity Les has stamped the crankcases, LPW 2002. That's his initials, and 2002, would have been the date of the bike's completion had he not let it drag on a few months into 2003. By that time he had already had the plate made, so 2002 it is!

Cylinder barrels used on the racers were warranty returns. Already heat stabilised, a +10 rebores overcame the necessity of long running-in.

Although a valuable addition to any collection, the bike would be worth even more if it carried the works tag. Les is having none of it. He has four grandchildren and says it is their legacy. "It is a way of rounding off the work I have done, it's the kind of motorcycle you display in an alcove in your house."

Les originally intended for it to be paraded. Now he is not so sure, but he certainly would never be happy if the engine cases contained only air. That would be another example of false pretences as far as Les is concerned.

LPW2002 is a fully operational example of a machine that could have been standing by as a spare at the 1971 Daytona 200 or TT.

Spec of the engine includes use of a special lightweight works crank, balanced con rods, a TH64 inlet cam and competition push rods, rockers and rocker boxes.

It was found T150 road bike engines would burn copious quantities of oil unless run in gradually over 3000 miles. The race team dodged this time consuming chore by using road bike barrels returned under warranty. Already heat stabilised, all they needed was a +10 rebores. These are the kind of barrels used on the F750 replica which runs an 11.8:1 compression ratio and produces about 80bhp.

Much of the additional power comes from porting work and Les says the head he has used is a state of the art example of the tuner as an artist. "When you have seen as many of these heads as I have you can just look at one and know if it's going to work or not. This one was done over at BSA and is particularly good."

A number of the works bikes were run with squish band heads in 1971 and an example was among the parts Les bought from the factory. However, he sold it before he began work on this project and says in terms of performance the squish head "never made that much difference."

Carbs do, and those on this machine are a collector's item in their own right. Take a close look - those are the original Jack Sheriens made Shermozines - the Anal Concentrics with hand-made velocity stacks he devised to replace the heavier to operate GP carbs the race bikes originally used.

Les says the one big advantage the Tridents had over the Bonnevilles the factory had previously raced was their vastly superior strength and reliability.

He said: "The Trident engine was smoother than the Bonnie and much stronger. The Bonnie on which Malcolm Uphill won the 1969 Production TT crossed the line with a cracked piston and would not have lasted another half a lap.

"The Production Bonnies we raced had to be stripped and rebuilt after each meeting but the Tridents could do 2000 miles at something like the Bol d'Or and still be okay. They had a much stronger bottom end and clutch."

There was, however, a weak point - the Quailie five-speed box inherited from the Bonneville racers. Les says it wasn't up to the job on the more powerful triple. The Mk II version was much better and is what Les has fitted to the replica.

An oil gauge has also been adopted for safety's sake but the rest of the bike is true to its origins, featuring a Rob North frame, swinging arm and yokes, Lockheed front disc and racing caliper with extended master cylinder, Girling shocks and steering damper, a three-into-one works exhaust, Daytona ignition system and Krober electronic rev counter. The 19in wheels have alloy hubs, and WJ rims. Standard road forks are retained, but with modified race springs and damping.

The late Bert Hopwood, co-designer of the Trident/Rocket 3 with Doug Hele and an executive on the BSA/Triumph Group board, writes in considerable detail about the triples in his book "Whatever Happened to the British Motorcycle Industry?" A suggestion he claims he made to the factory in 1970 was the production of a limited edition road bike based on the Rob North-framed F750. Who knows if it would have sold?

Sam underwent many changes of spot during his successful track career. Frame and brakes were changed and the engine which carried him to his TT wins was not the one first fitted on the Herdien assembly line. The last of his TT wins was scored on a 1968 upped in capacity from 750 to 1000cc and saw Sam run with decked-in 76mm barrels and in WTV race colours.

I AM CONVINCED HE WOULD RATHER DESTROY THE F750 HE HAS MADE THAN HAVE IT FALSELY REPRESENTED AS A GENUINE WORKS BIKE.

Taste of success

I WAS very interested to read the article 'Mountains, Bears and Moosedrool' in the last Torque. I market English hops in the US for a group of Herefordshire farmers and one of our big successes is 'Big Sky Brewing' in Missoula, Montana, who brew 'Moesedrool'.

Matt Long is the head brewer; I saw him only last month and had my share of 'Moesedrool', which is brewed with some English malt and the all-English hop variety Goldings. So Triumph aren't the only successful export to the USA and Canada!

Classic style

I ENCLOSE some photos of my Bonneville which took second place in the Cafe Racer class at the recent Swedish Bikemeet.

All the parts are made by myself. The bike is great fun to ride and takes me back almost 30 years when I'm behind the handlebars.

Triumph to the core

I WAS the first American to road race in Europe after the war. All my racing was done on Triumphs and I continued to race after my return from service in AMA, ERA, WERA and AHRA. My present stable includes four Triumphs. Number 9 is a 1967 factory Daytona 500 racer, which I believe is the bike Gary Nixon rode to victory at Daytona. Number 4 is Rod Coates' 1949 Grand Prix bike that he won on in 1950.

The line-up also includes the 1979 Trident I have owned from new and my 2003 Bonneville. That is my original helmet, which through the years has apparently thinned.

If they ever perform surgery on me, they will find "Triumph"铭刻 on my heart.

God's in his heaven and all is well

I NEVER thought that purchasing my first Triumph would be such a religious experience.

Day one. I had been working at Triumph for a little over a year when one I saw it.

There it was. A sky blue and olive Bonneville. It was like a bright light come over me, and I realised THIS was the bike I had to have.

Day two. I finally owned the bike. As I sat on the bike I noticed the sky blue paint was the color of heaven, and the deep rich silver was comparable the finest metal mother earth could produce.

Day three. I added saddlebags, loud pipes, front windshield, and a centre stand. I looked at my new motorcycle and said to myself: "All is good."

Day four. After making my selection from Triumph's clothing catalogue I was ready to ride in any season, rain or shine. Looking at myself in mirror, I thought: "Man, I look good!"

Day five was when I realised that all that shopping had made me hungry. I discovered that Wednesday was RAT night at the Prince of Wales pub. Between bike night at Hooters on Tuesday, RAT night Wednesday, and Beer O'Brady's Thursday, I realised that owing a Triumph provided me with a plethora of food and cold beer on which to feast. I knew I would never go hungry.

Day six was a special day. This was the day my Honey On Honey finally joined me for a ride. It was like Eden, with just my wife and me all alone cruising the Georgia back roads. It was a perfect afternoon.

Day seven was my day of rest. A three hundred mile ride in awesome weather through the country roads of Georgia. All was good in my universe.

Up front

with Simon Carter

After a summer of partying and glorious riding, it's time to look forward to what remains of the season. The 2003 RAT year has been an unqualified success with all four Raids selling out. Attending Triumph events has for many become an important part of their social life. If you have yet to experience this for yourself then you simply must come along on an event and find out why these are selling out months in advance.

The spirit of the Triumph rider was summed up for me at the recent RAT at 'The Track' event we held at Cadwell Park. The truly giddy weather did its best to interfere with the proceedings, but absolutely everyone remained cheerful, happy and positive. The fact that everyone was soaking wet and had lost track time was irrelevant. Triumph riders were there to have a good time and make the most of the day, regardless of the obstacles put in their way. During the lengthened lunch break the cantine walls reverberated with excited conversation and laughter – that's what it's all about.

It's the same on our other events, and that's what makes RAT unique. Customers, pack leaders, dealers, Triumph and RAT staff are all enthusiastic and passionate about what RAT stands for, and are keen to promote and strengthen the Triumph spirit. The winter edition of Torque will carry details of the 2004 schedule. Be prepared to book early!

I would like to welcome Ben Gray to the team in the UK. He is responsible for the administration of the club and will become involved with the running of the events next year. We will be covering the RAT section of the Triumph stand at the NEC together this November; so if you are coming to Birmingham for the annual International Motorcycle Show make sure that you head to Triumph first! It's a great place to catch up with friends old and new, and start looking forward to next year!

Enjoy the rest of the 2003 season. Ride safe.

RAT Summer Party

Take it to the Bridge!

Triumph ValMoto were the deserved stars of the show when RAT converged at Ironbridge in June.

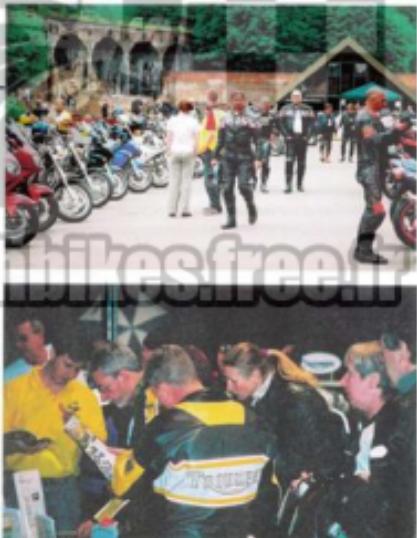

Craig, Jim and the rest of the ValMoto team were joined by John McGuiness and Bruce Anstey to provide a very welcome and appreciated presence. A special presentation was made to TT winner Anstey during the afternoon and he left Ironbridge with his TT winning bike in the back of his van! For the rest of the day and night she team mingled with the large crowd, signing autographs, posing for pictures and chit-chatting.

It was a terrific day with the vast majority of attendees visiting some of the world famous sites that the Ironbridge area is famous for. By late afternoon the town was swamped with bikes as hundreds of Triumphs toured the area and soaked up the glorious sunshine.

Those who stayed for the evening were treated to a top meal, some challenging competitions and music late into the night.

Triumph Product and Racing Manager Ross Clifford presents TT winner Bruce Anstey with the keys to his Daytona 600.

The weekend was wrapped up nicely with a ride out on the Sunday morning. The Wylie and Holland pack led the well-attended 'Shropshire Lad' tour, which culminated in a visit to Ludlow castle.

Many thanks to our partners Pirelli, Triumph Rider Insurance, RAT Retail and Wylie and Holland who provided terrific support throughout the day.

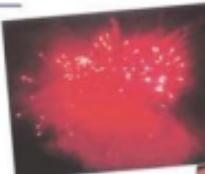

German Summer Party

I was part of it!

The first Triumph German Summer party took place in July near Gießen and attracted a mammoth crowd of 1000 people, including a contingent from the UK.

German RAT co-ordinator Rüdiger Buck, with brilliant backing from the entire Triumph Germany office, put together a marvellous day and night of entertainment.

Fashion Times.

Temperatures in the daytime climbed to a sizzling 38 degrees centigrade, but this didn't prevent the enthusiastic crowd cheering on the falshion and stunt shows and making the most of the day. The nearby lake did a roaring trade throughout the day as people hunted for somewhere so cool off, and Triumph riders paddled happily in the cooling waters alongside hundreds of bemused locals!

Over 600 people stayed for the evening event and cheered on the brilliant group, 'The Oldies', until the early hours of the morning. A huge fireworks display entertained the crowds prior to the group's finale. Triumph Germany staff then took over the running of the bar at 1am when the catered bar staff finished, with time finally being called at 4am!

This was a terrific first effort for Triumph Germany and can be highly recommended for a visit for next year!

Dorset Raid - 2003

Bank Holiday Biking

The superb Chime hotel in Bournemouth played host to the second UK Raid of the season at the end of May.

Over 70 members sat down to a fantastic buffet on the Friday night in the atmospheric surroundings of the Sea View restaurant. Roland Wirth, who had travelled from south Germany for the weekend, stayed up late into the night with a handy contingent, many who regressed their late night at breakfast on Saturday morning!

Nigel and Julie Baker of the Three Cross RAT pack had put the event together and they had devised an inspired roadbook. We circled the beautiful county of Dorset, dodged the showers, and avoided all of the usual Bank Holiday traffic – an impressive achievement!

Party Time!

During Saturday evening we again enjoyed a terrific menu and danced the night away to the fantastic rock band 'Lucky' until the early hours. Once again the hospitality of the hotel was enjoyed to the full, and it turned into another late night for many of the group. Breakfast on Sunday morning was therefore a much more sober (and quiet) affair!

We left Bournemouth at the more sociable time of 10.30am and headed out across the moors, dodging the showers, to Bucklers Hard. As with the previous day's ride, many local riders came along to boost the numbers, and our procession made an awesome impression as we thundered through the New Forest.

Many thanks to Nigel and Julie and Three Cross Motorcycles who put together a wonderful weekend.

Riders in the Storm.

Cadwell Park

Drowned RATS at the Track!

Seventy Triumphs, including a hardy group from Sweden, braved atrocious conditions for the inaugural UK track event at Cadwell Park in July.

The run of good weather that the UK had been enjoying through the summer was rudely and abruptly halted with constant heavy rain doing its best to interrupt the proceedings. Despite the miserable conditions, the Triumph spirit shone through, and everyone waterproofed up and got out on track.

The excellent European Superbike School ran the day with additional tuition being offered by British racing legend Niall Mackenzie. The conditions were so foul that at two separate points during the day, the circuit was closed for safety concerns. Even this was not enough to deter us, and Tony Scott from the school and Niall held an impromptu questions and answer session that was enthusiastically received by everyone drying off in the clubhouse.

For many, it was their first taste of track riding, and having now tackled one of the most technical circuits in the UK in these conditions, everyone

Your not coming through Keith Quigley attacking Cadwell on his Trophy 12. who rode can feel confident enough to tackle more track days – but next time in the dry!

At the very least, it was a perfect opportunity to develop and improve wet riding skills, and the overwhelming feedback from those who attended was that the day had been a huge success.

Look out for details of 'RAT' at the Track II – the dry sequel, coming to a Torque near you soon.

Each day you were free to do your own thing and to ride at your own pace. There were no big groups, and most people split up into groups of four or five bikes, with continuous meetings at the many coffee stops.

Saturday and Wednesday there were no planned rides; some were riding anyway, some went on a 4x4 adventure in the mountains, others strolled into the village or lounged around the pool.

Each day was different and a real adventure. On the second day Hervé and Annie led the Brit contingent on a loop via the village of Orgosolo.

The ride itself was breathtaking, as was following Hervé riding one-handed chatting to Annie negotiating brown-trouser hairpins!

The village of Orgosolo is quite extraordinary. Isolated in the mountains, over the centuries it has acquired an outlaw reputation. Many of the buildings are covered in amazing frescoes and beautiful graffiti, making a political statement. For example one huge Fresco showed a Minister of Finance with millions of Euros flowing into his pockets.

We quickly got to know our fellow riders, who were mostly French with a Belgian and four Swiss. One encounter beside the road led to some Anglo-French collaboration when a French Trophy suffered a broken throttle cable. After much discussion, the pilot came up with the idea of using the clutch cable as a hand throttle to get home.

It was a truly wonderful adventure, and I would thoroughly recommend it. Incredible riding, wonderful scenery, great roads, good company,

Sardinia Tour

3000 bends per day

'Three thousand bends per day' was the promise made by Hervé Descamps for the first Sardinia RAT adventure, and UK rider Nick Westcott found out he was right. Nick takes up the story:

Some 40 bikes, gathered in Marseilles to catch the overnight ferry Scandola to Porto Torres in Sardinia. After an excellent dinner, we gathered for a briefing by Hervé in which he explained that the locals were very biker-friendly, that the road surfaces were excellent, and warned us of unusual hazards such as the many free-ranging animals including sheep, horses, cows and snakes!

Arriving in Sardinia, we had a 203km ride to the hotel Sa Muvias in Arzio. Hugging the coast for much of the way, with a lunch stop in the tourist resort of Alghero, we then ventured inland into the mountains. Everything went fine until the town of Abbasanta, where everybody got horribly lost. Eventually arriving at Arzio, our base for the next 9 days, we were almost caught out by the tortuous ride up the hotel drive-way.

The first riding day very quickly proved Hervé's 3,000 bend promise. Not only was there a bend almost every 100 yards, but the road surfaces were superb. Although an island something like the size of Wales, the contrasting scenery of Sardinia was incredible, from high snow-tipped mountain ranges, through arid plains and lakes, to lush green agricultural land and rocky beaches with crystal-clear sparkling sea.

Hervé will be leading another RAT Tour to Sardinia in 2004. More details in the Winter edition of Torque.

Rocamadour Raid

Mixing motorcycling and gastronomy

A hundred people from France, Great Britain and Spain came together on Friday June 6 in Cahors, South West France, for a tempting cocktail of great roads and fine food!

We woke on Saturday to glorious sunshine, and the riders set off on the narrow roads of the Lot department towards St Cirque Lapopie to enjoy the views and explore the picturesque village. Next came the Lot Valley roads towards Carjac and Martelhau/Céle. By the time lunch arrived, the sun was at its peak and everyone was delighted to get off their bikes and out of their kit for a couple of hours!

In the afternoon the crowd snaked towards the fantastic medieval city of Rocamadour! By the time they returned to the hotel, most were in urgent need of refreshment and cooling down. This led to the amusing spectacle of several riders jumping straight into the hotel swimming pool – still fully dressed from their long day on the road!

The highlight of Sunday was undoubtedly the meal we had at Domaine de Terre Blanche in St Puy. We feasted on foie gras, semme and home-made choucroute. The return journey to Cahors was at a gentle pace as some people had put on a bit of weight!

Without a doubt, many will be back next year, and this time, they will pack lighter so they will be able to squeeze in a little more local produce to take home!

Belgian RAT Tour

A Country in a Day

Sixty riders participated in the Belgian RAT Tour hosted by Triumph dealers Mourin & Cie, Ath; Triumph Marche, Marche-en-Famenne; Motorservice Sterckx, Bertem; and BMC, Erpe-Mere.

During the day, the riders were able to discover the different landscapes that constitute Belgium, from the hills of Ath in the Hainaut region, to the Flanders plains via the Belgian Ardennes. In brief, a panorama of the most beautiful Belgian countryside in a warm atmosphere and at a steady pace.

The day was punctuated by stops at each of the participating dealers, who welcomed the riders with big smiles and very welcome drinks and snacks, with each rider keen to get his road-book stamped and to start the next leg of the journey.

So, a leisurely 300-mile run, which ended with each participant back at their participating dealer (with, of course, this being Belgium, a beer).

Many thanks go to the dealers and the Pack Leader for their help and participation in this event.

Assen Track Day

Grand Prix Experience

What a fantastic day in the north of Holland. Perfect conditions accompanied us at the famous circuit of Assen on June 6. In cooperation with the experienced team of CRT we improved our skills on the demanding curves of Assen. A good turnout of 60 Triumph riders gathered from Holland, Belgium, France, England and Germany.

Everyone got the chance to ride in a group of his or her personal riding style and level. Christiane, a Roulette Green TT600 rider, had passed her test only the day before and she stunned all of the riders in her group with her ability!

We hope to return in 2004, but we need high numbers pre-booked so make this feasible. If you fancy the track session of a lifetime contact Ruediger now!

RB

Champagne Run The French Way

This trip was organised and planned by the Cheltenham RAT pack. Pete Harris takes up the story of their magical weekend in France:

My wife and I had attended this raid for the previous two years, and felt this would be an ideal event for members of our local RAT pack, and other countrywide friends, many of whom had expressed an interest in the event continuing. The date was fixed and advertised in December and to our surprise it was sold out, with a substantial waiting list, by March.

Steve Prior met up with five bikes at Reading services at 6am on the Friday morning. Michelle and I were already in France and we met up with this excited group, which had had its numbers swelled at Calais Ferry Port later that morning.

We set off across France to Pierrefonds and the legendary chateau that cannot fail to impress as you enter the village.

By this time we were traveling on twisty D roads, which made progress interesting and was the main talking point over dinner that evening.

Saturday saw an early start over more challenging roads, viewing the magnificent scenery of the whole area. Our time cap of the day was a RAT view. Overlooking the vineyards.

Dmitri French home at Haussillers.

Virgny at the Rouger Coulon Champagne House. We were welcomed by Eric and Isabelle Coulon and were treated to an excellent tour around their Champagne house with of course the tasting at the end!

After the Champagne it was off to the Café Hautvillers for an excellent lunch. This village is where Dom Pérignon first discovered Champagne. After a traditional two hour lunch, it was back on the bikes and we headed towards Ay through the Moet et Chandon vineyard to one of the highest viewpoints of the region for a photo stop. 35-degree temperatures dictated that an ice-cold beer was the order of the day on return to our accommodation!

The hotel surpassed itself during the evening with the entertainment and food, which seemed to be never ending along with the wine and champagne.

Prizes donated by Bransons, our supporting dealer, and RAT were duly won as people answered some challenging questions. The winning slips were drawn from a Champagne bucket with plenty of applause and jeering! It was a truly memorable evening with excesses of drinking, singing and dancing on the tables into the early hours.

Sunday arrived, and I had not expected many to join us on the return to Calais, but I was pleasantly surprised with the attendance. The route took in more views, smooth tarmac and a final lunch.

Steve, Michelle and myself wish to thank everyone who supported the event. The feedback has been so positive that we will run the event again, staying for three nights, next year.

Raising the glass at Roger Coulon's.

Top to Pierrefonds before returning to Calais.

Italian Triumph Day Hot Latin Action

The 6th Triumph Day took place on the weekend of May 31 and June 1, in blazing sunshine, on the Varano racetrack, near Parma in Italy.

During the two days, nearly 400 motorbikes and hundreds of Italian Triumph fans gathered on and around the Maserati circuit.

And what a weekend! The track remained open for the duration of the event, offering even the most hard-hitting sport riders ample opportunity to attack the testing circuit. It's fair to say that all had a fantastic time!

What's more, Triumph sponsored stunt rider Kevin Carmichael, boosted the temperature by several degrees with his amazing show on a Speed Triple! French RAT Co-ordinator Bertrand Goyez was a willing participant in the show and learnt a couple of new tricks that he has been expressly forbidden to attempt himself when out on the road!

This event continues to grow and is turning into a 'must-do' for an increasing number of riders. The 2004 event is scheduled for the last weekend of May. It's a long way to go – but certainly worth it for the experience!

Mistral Run - France

May 15

Are you ready for this? Last Spring 30 members rode from the south of France to Belgium in a day - without using motorways. This time we're doing it in the opposite direction! It's not a race and there's no time schedule, but it is a real test of endurance - an event for experienced tourers.

Starting from Ath in southern Belgium, we will head south through eastern France, visiting Verdun, Dijon and Beaune, before climbing the twists and turns of the Massif Central to call at St Etienne, Le Puy and Mende.

Heading through the wonderful Cevennes hills as the sun goes down, we will reach the finish at Nimes where the strong local RAT pack will guarantee a warm welcome!

Not for the faint-hearted or the tender of posterior, but places are limited and most who took part last year want to do it again, so don't delay if you want to get your name on the starting list.

Entry costs € 100 and includes dinner and accommodation in Ath on the Friday night, roadbook for Saturday's marathon ride, dinner and accommodation and Sunday lunch in Nimes. There be a prize draw and prize giving during lunch to close the event.

Tour of France

June 20-26

Something special. More than a Raid, but not a package tour. This week-long circuit takes in some of the highlights of France, with the emphasis on gentle tourism and sharing local culture and cuisine rather than long hours in the saddle. Perfect for a short Summer holiday.

Leaving Paris, the route takes us east to the fortress city of Metz, then south into the shadow of the Alps at Aix-les-Bains. Tuesday takes us to Cannes and the Mediterranean. Next stop is the ancient Roman city of Nimes, then on to Toulouse.

The final stop is at Issoire near Clermont Ferrand in the Massif Central where we are scheduled to meet up with the first French national RAT event (more info on that in the Winter edition of Torque).

The cost of the tour is just €600 per person, including bed, breakfast and evening meal each day and road books. Numbers will be limited.

For more information or to reserve a place, contact Hervé Descamps at herve.hdp@wanadoo.fr, +33 (0)4.66.85.42.96.

Respected RAT raid organiser Hervé Descamps is hosting this adventure for those who enjoy something out of the ordinary.

RAT Tours

'RAT Tours' are a new concept in the range of events offered by RAT. Longer than Raids and with fewer participants, they are designed to offer members a special 'once in a lifetime' holiday experience.

Each one will be organised in partnership with a specialist motorcycle tour operator and will include the support of an experienced guide and back-up team as well as the best roads, typical hotels and superb food. Most will also offer the possibility of hiring a Triumph.

Each tour will be accompanied by a member of the RAT staff and will be open to RAT members only.

To start the ball rolling we are offering two superb trips in 2004 - The 'Canadian Rockies Tour' in June and the 'Olympian Tour' in Greece in September. If these are a success we will expand the programme in future seasons.

All enquiries and bookings should be directed to our organising partner:

Looking back at the experience Steve said: "There was such a difference between my last ride as a passenger, both in terms of speed, acceleration and my lack of fitness! I managed to do two laps and that was enough. I felt like I had done a two hour gym session the way my muscles ached afterwards!" Action continues with several rides for the rest of the year:

Dandenong – Peter Stevens Motorcycles

David Owen continues in his role as Pack Leader and recently organised a successful run to Apollo Bay. Ten Triumphs made the trip, with the group enjoying the riding that much that the traditional late dash for the ferry resulted in half of the group being left behind on the Island.

There is a calendar of regular monthly runs, and for the very latest pack news and ride information please contact David on (03) 9791 7712 for all of the latest information and pack news.

West Gosford – Ric Andrews Motorcycles

Peter Regan carries on with his role, and had 18 bikes turn up for his seventh RAT run on 6 July.

The group took some new roads over to Merriwa, enjoyed lunch, and then dashed home before dark to avoid any mad kangaroos! By the end of the day Peter had covered 500kms although Wayne from Sydney put up an highly impressive total of 700km for the day!

Ric Andrews out and about.

Portugal

Our fledgling RAT pack in Oporto has been busy again, and dealer Armando Costa organised this recent day out.

The purpose of the ride was to visit two remote villages in northeast Portugal with the intention of giving the very few children there some T-shirts and caps. The weather was perfect; lunch on the way was delicious and the company event better!

Happy memories of riding in Portugal.

Many thanks to RAT members Joses and Helena Borges for the information and the picture!

Belgium

Ath - Mourin & Cie

There is one last run to tempt you this year, organised by this busy pack.

14 September: Hainaut Run. A run in the heart of 'Pays des Collines'. Further information can be obtained through Christian Mourin +32 (68) 28 15 12 or rat.rigole.be@skynet.be.

Ertvelde - BMC

Sixteen members took part in the run to Triumph Day at the Ace Cafe. Luckily they were blessed with terrific weather as temperatures soared to 30 degrees. They got to Calais for 7am and finally got back to Belgium at midnight! A long day on the road, with the pack racking up 850kms but it was definitely worth it!

28 September: Autumn Run.

Pack Leader Marc Mass can be reached at 03/644 39 50 or via email at marc.m@skynet.be.

Finland

Speed Bikes Helsinki

The RAT pack of our Finnish friends spent the weekend of 13-15 June at the nationwide bike meeting Brittilähti. Nearly 15 pack members and over all about 50 Hockley Triumphs joined this unique meeting in the far north of the continent.

Fourteen riders used the opportunity for a ride-out to nearby dealer Motos-Seinäjoki where they enjoyed test rides, cold drinks and checked out some sampling offers in the shop. With the help of several other dealers the pack held a good raffle and managed to recruit some new members for RAT as well. If you're planning a trip to Scandinavia why not schedule it in for the next year? It will be again the mid-June weekend. Details can be obtained from Pack Leader Pekka Gullsten at +358407366534 or at rat@skynet.fi.

Regular meetings are held at Kävittö Roolta, between main roads 3 and 130, 40 kms north of Helsinki, with winter meetings held at Shell Etelä-Haaga Vihdintie 21, near the roundabout on the first Tuesday of each month.

South Africa

Advanced riding school, Zwartkops Raceway Pretoria

A crisp highveld morning, a low of three with a predicted high of 19. Not a cloud in the sky and a great turnout of over 50 Triumphs!

Most of those attending this session had never ridden on a track before, but Dirk had his usual crew of experienced instructors on hand to assist.

Every model was represented, from Bonnevilles to Daytonas, and as always, the atmosphere was relaxed, with everyone there to learn to enjoy their Triumph more!

Graskop Run, June 28-29

The second run of the year. The first was a ride down to Maluti Mountain Lodge. This was organised by Martin Woodhead and was a great success, but I was away, hence no pictures!

The Graskop Run was planned by George & Penny with accommodation at the Log Cabin Village with all meals and lots of refreshments catered for by the Loco Pub & Grill, the old Graskop station which still has a lot of the original fixtures and fittings.

The weather in Job was great, a typically cold clear winter's day. However this did not last and by the time we reached the top of the escarpment the clouds were thick and heavy and rain was on the agenda.

First stop was to pick up George who had decided to go down Robben Pass without his RS! Fortunately only his ego was injured! Everyone eventually arrived at the Log Cabins with no further incidents, where we were really made welcome by Brendan & Linda. A very festive evening was spent at the Loco Pub where we were entertained by a local one man band Ian who kept going long after his bedtime.

Saturday dawned wet and miserable and the planned ride was out of the question. Everyone however managed to amuse themselves as there was lots of sport on TV from a wet Dutch Moto GP to some pretty poor racing.

Mike Davison

French visit

A group of French Triumph fans from the island of La Réunion paid a visit during the Spring, led by dealers Jean-Paul Magnoni and Frédéric Fouqueré.

Welcome by Triumph SK's Chris Speight, the visitors travelled from Durban through the Kruger National Park and reported a night in a zulu village as one of the highlights of their trip.
